I have a QListWidget and i want to add new QPushButton in QListWidget's header element. How can I do that? A: You add an icon to the list widget: QIcon dataIcon(":/icons/database.png"); QListWidgetItem *item = new QListWidgetItem(dataIcon, data, top); Then when you want to add your button, add it to the label:
QListWidgetItem *btn = new QListWidgetItem(buttonName, list); list->addItem(btn);
A: You can: set a static image into QListWidgetItem constructor, use QIcon or QPixmap for your button, use actions (see API) to add push buttons. The latter approach looks like this: QPushButton *btn = new QPushButton(list.data());
btn->setObjectName("myButton"); btn->setText("My Label"); btn->setMinimumHeight(20);
btn->setMaximumHeight(20); // Add action to btn by the name of 'pushButton', or by a uuid: QAction *action = list.actions().at(btn->objectName());

action->setData(QVariant(btn));
action->setCheckable(true); list->addAction(action);
list->show();

mouse pointer is on the first line of text and the click event is captured. The only thing I can do is to scroll to the desired place but it "jumps" to that place instantly. I don't want that. How can I do that? A: This should do the trick: `$("#myId").focus(function () { var t = this.scrollHeight; var pos = this.scrollTop; this.scrollTop = (pos > t? 0 : pos) });` The identification of genes which have an impact on cellular functions has become a major objective of the pharmaceutical industry. While the process of gene cloning has become more efficient, the task of identifying mutations which will have an impact on a certain physiological process has become increasingly daunting. Here is my loop. it takes many hours to finish. But I don't want to run it in console for many hours, I want to see the progression of the loop. In the end I have a list of lists. What should I do to monitor its progress? # python program MAX_COUNT = 100000 for j in range(1, MAX_COUNT + 1): x = list() y = list() for i in range(1,1000000): if i%10000 == 0: x.append(i)

y.append(0) if i%10000000 == 0: x.append(i)
y.append(1) if i%1000000000 == 0: x.append(i)
y.append(2) if i%2000000000 == 0: x.append(i)
y.append(3) if i%4000000000 == 0: x.append(i)
y.append(4)
